PORTAGE.

THE following article, furnished by the kindness of Mr. C. D. Bennett, was received too late for insertion in Chapter XXI; but as it is worthy of preservation, we insert it in this connection:—

Portage was in Albany county from its organization, November 1, 1683, soon after the colony of New York was taken by the English from the Dutch. It was in Tryon county from March 12, 1772, till that name was changed to Montgomery, April 2, 1784. It became a part of Ontario county January 27, 1788, and was embraced in the town of Northampton, which included the Morris reserve, in 1797. March 30, 1802, it became a part of Leicester, Genesee county, and was included in the town of Angelica, February 25, 1805. It went to Allegany county at its formation, April 7, 1806, and was included in Nunda at its organization, March 11, 1808. It was erected as a town and named Portage, from the carrying place round the Genesee Falls, March 8, 1827. April 1, 1846, it was annexed to Livingston county, about one-fourth its area, lying west of the river, being with a part of Pike constituted the town of Genesee Falls, and set to Wyoming county at the same time. It was a part of the Morris reserve, and is wholly within the 50,000 acre tract sold in 1791 by Robert Morris to Gerrit Cottringer, and which lies between the Transit and the Picket lines, extending from near Silver Lake to Granger Centre.

It was soon afterwards bought by John Hornby, of Scotland, who made John Greig, of Canandaigua, his agent for its sale and settlement. He employed Elisha Johnson to survey and sub-divide it in 1807.

The lots are oblong, about three-fourths of a mile long and 106 rods wide, containing about 160 acres and number from 1 to 279. The numbers from 135 to 235 constitute the town of Portage, 16,564 acres.

On every lot Mr. Johnson noted the quality of the soil, and the kind and quality of the timber, with special reference to the amount of pine. On every pine lot he estimated the amount of pine timber as equivalent to a certain number of acres thickly set with good pines.

Nearly one-fourth of the town in the northern part was mainly timbered with oak, chestnut, hickory, etc., with too little pine for mention. On the rest it was estimated at from 2 acres to 140 acres on a lot.

Lots 178, 186, 196, 203, 225, 226, 233 and 234 averaged 100 acres of pine each, while the total of the pine lands in the town was very near 2,000 acres.

Probably no measurement was ever made of the quantity of lumber cut from a given acre of land; but on some acres it was estimated as high as 75,000 feet of pine.

Some trees were of gigantic size, measuring over 200 feet in height, and some over 7 feet in diameter; a log 12 feet long making 2,000 feet of lumber one inch thick.

There was a large quantity of splendid oak, some that would saw 5,000 feet of lumber to the tree.

Along the streams stood a large growth of maple, cucumber, etc. The timber as it stood would be worth more at present prices than the real estate and personal property now in town.

The soil is mostly a sandy and gravelly loam, dry and warm, suitable for the growth of corn and winter wheat.

Though at about the same altitude with the towns west of the river, the snow fall is much less than there and comparatively free from drifts, while the spring comes on a week or more earlier.

Though her acreage is less than half the average of the other towns in the county, the number of her freeholders is 430, while their average is little over 300.

The upper valley of the Genesee river is 1,100 feet above tide water, and more than 500 feet higher than the lower valley at Mt. Morris. The intervening distance the river runs through deep gorges or cañons, in a direct course about 12 miles.

The Erie railroad is about 250 feet higher than the river valley, while the surface of the south part of the town rises as much higher, or 1,600 feet above tide water.

Through Portage lay the shortest and easiest route between the Squakie Hill and Canadea reservations, and here the trail of the Indian had been traveled for centuries. Here was constructed the Genesee Valley canal. The easiest grade across the river, till far north, is through this town, and here the Erie railroad was laid.

The ever-increasing stream of migration westward that set in after the Revolution and the destruction of the Indians' power, seemed to stop with the century, at the Genesee river. It followed two principal channels: one up the Susquehanna and its branches into Allegany; the other over the level land north of the lake country.

The new century gave vigor and volume to the west-bound rush. The Holland Company was laying roads to lure it on. Connecticut was leading it to her reserve in Ohio.

Southern Livingston was between the streams. The various tracts it comprised were not in the market. It was thickly settled by squatters of that rough and restless class who like to live on the verge of civilization and prefer the liberty that is not limited by law.

In 1816, George Williams, sent by Mr. Greig to act as resident agent, opened a land office on Oak Hill, near the deep cut. Settlers came in rapidly, so that in a few years nearly every lot was sold at from $3.50 to $1.50 per acre. Though strong inducements were offered to incline some of the scores of squatters to buy and remain, Ephraim Kingsley, a noted hunter from Vermont, was, perhaps, the only one who bought and settled. They sold their "betterments" for what they could get and went west.

Where the old Allegany road crosses the East Coy and West, Coy creeks, settlers began to stop in 1805-6. March 11, 1808, they procured the erection of the town of Nunda, 12 miles by 2½, now constituting the towns of Centerville, Eagle, Genesee Falls, Granger, Grove, Hume, Nunda, Pike and Portage.

For several years Mr. Kingsley, who lived a mile below Nunda village, was the only town officer elected east of the river; but with the rapid settlement of the Cottringer tract, it was evident that the center of population would soon fall east of the Transit line.

The founders of Nunda, at their own request, were constituted a new town named Pike, after General Albert Pike, and Oak Hill became the business center of Nunda, then twelve miles square, March 6th, 1818. The Tuscarora tract and other lands comprised in the present town of Nunda soon after were offered for sale and settlement. The town was inconveniently large and several plans for its division were proposed at successive town meetings till March 8th, 1827. Portage was set off six miles square, containing most of the population that had constituted Nunda. On the erection of a new town it generally takes the new name, as when Angelica was formed from Leicester and Nunda from Angelica. But Smith's Mills (now Portageville) was ambitious to become a town center, and effected a division of the town, by consequence taking the new name, while Nunda was again moved eastward into the recent wilderness, retaining the books and files of papers made by the Doles, the Grangers, Griffiths, Newcombs, Skiffs and Mills, common names in Pike, but foreign to modern Nunda.

The business relations of Portage and Nunda were mostly with the dealers in Livingston county, and a large majority of the people preferred that their political connections should go with them. At the town meeting held in Portageville in 1846 the voters present from the east side of the river almost unanimously voted to be set from Allegany county into Livingston, while those from the west side voted in favor of being set into Wyoming county.

Probably no other town was settled with a population so uniformly of Yankee origin. The north part, called North Oak Hill, was settled by the Dakes, Millers, Moshers, Giffords, and many others originally from New England. A few years later it was said that there were seventy-five blood relations in their school district.

Messenger's Hollow, now called Oakland, was settled by the Fitches, Hills, McNairs, Messengers, Swains and others, mostly related.

On Oak Hill came the Adamases, Frenches, Markses, Robinsons, Smiths, Spencers, Strangs, etc., relatives from Pawlet, Vt. East of them settled the Newtons, Pattersons, Thompsons, relatives, from Coleraine, Mass.

Around Hunt's Hollow were the Allens, Bennetts, Clarks, Cobbs, Hunts, Devoes, Nashes, Parmeleees, Slaters, Rcots, Williamses, etc., mainly from Connecticut.

Pennycook (so named by Mr. Rosebrook at his raising of the first log house there) was settled later by people from various places.

The town was long distinguished for the excellence of its common schools and for the number of teachers it sent forth. It has always been a temperance town, perhaps because it has but little village population.

In the Morgan excitement it was strongly Anti-Masonic. It became as decidedly Whig, and is now as much so Republican.

Of the more than twenty saw-mills built on the banks of the river and Cashagua creek the last one failed nearly twenty years ago. The vast quantity of pine lumber cut by them was run in rafts to Rochester, there assorted by the buyers into three qualities and sold at an average of $5, $7, and $10 per M, the poorer quality outmeasuring both the others.

The risks and labor of rafting ceased when the Genesee Valley Canal was completed to Mt. Morris in 1840, for it was better to haul lumber the sixteen miles than to raft it, but Portage had sold most of her lumber before that time, or, rather, she had given the lumber, and got small pay for the cost and labor of handling it.

One saw-mill of 2,000 feet per day capacity succeeds the score of former years, lumber and shingles come to us from Michigan and Canada, and even climb the hills to Allegany. Nor are the families of the pioneers more permanent than their works, for the descendants of only seven of them, viz: of David Bennett, George Gearhart, John McFarlane, Nath. Olney, Robert W. Thompson, George Williams and Solomon Williams now hold any part of the premises originally taken by them from the land office.

Thomas Tousey Bennett was one of the seven brothers who assisted in clearing the wilderness and developing the water power at Hunt's Hollow.

His mill for felling, coloring and dressing the home-made cloth of the early settlers was erected about 1821 or 1822, and was for a long time a prominent feature in the business of the place.

Of the twelve saw-mills on the Cashagua creek in the town of Portage the one built by him and Deacon Samuel Swain was one of the best.

He died in 1849, leaving four boys and three girls, all of whom settled in western states, except Sarah, the youngest daughter. She married William Tousey in 1845, and soon occupied the Tousey homestead. They have there reared a family of four children, viz: Lucy Cornelia, Emma Jane, Carrie A. and Lucius C. Tousey.
